

The Forbidden flower

There once was a family who lived on the outskirts of Bristol, and they had the house other families dreamed of having. It had 6 floors and in the biggest/main room there was a chandelier hanging from the roof. However the one bad thing was in the centre of their enormous garden there was a 8ft plant with poisonous spikes going down the stem, at the top there is a pink flower head with hair down it. This plant had to be treated with special gas every day to keep the spikes from growing. The family who lived in the house had a little secret that if anyone found out their lives would be over, the secret was the flower was their son, by day a poisonous and by night a 12 year old boy who poisoned everything he touched with his hands. The little boy was not allowed out or to school or to even the shops he had to be locked in a safe room, whenever guests came round the family would give him a sleeping pill so it would not make noise, and the neighbours went under what's in the room. One day the boy didn't turn into a flower or when he touched anything it didn't burn and get poisoned the family did tests on him and it turns out the flower had died and the boy could live his life normally and do things other kids do like go to school and go out with kids and just live a normal life. But when the family went out with the kid they had to come up with an ridiculous excuse as to why they had never seen him and why he was calling the parents mum and dad. Their excuse was he's been with my sister for 12 years because I couldn't handle it, I was only young. But the child did not know how to speak or do any human things because he had been a flower for all those years! The parents had to treat him like a baby and teach him how to use the potty and eat, drink. Then the parents were talking one evening and they said what would happen if another forbidden flower grew back inside him and he went back to his old self, then what would they do and tell people, that he'd just gone back to his aunts because people would start to get ~~jealous~~ suspicious and start to ask questions also people have seen that the flower has gone so if it just magically reappeared and the boy just left. The parents and family started to get worried and panic but then they came up with the idea of getting all the seeds surgically removed but then the doctor would know so they decided to learn how to perform surgery themselves and get the seeds removed that way, however the risk of it was him dying because the seeds were in his heart and they were going to take that risk so they left it and luckily the child never became a flower again and grew up to have a lovely job, family and house.
